Your Own Show

Congrats! You deserve your own TV show. All the drama and excitement in your life makes you a fascinating subject for an Osbournes-style series. Audiences will be glued to their sets! Sure, you'll have to deal with cameras in your face 24 hours a day, but you'll be a star. Pretty bleeping cool!

Jack Osbourne
Out of Control

The scoop: Reality TV star Jack Osbourne checked himself into a rehab facility after almost dying from a dangerous combination of alcohol and painkillers. He candidly related the tale of his experience with OxyContin addiction on MTV.

The scandal: We're happy that Jack cleaned himself up, but the whole affair exposed the dark side of the "young Hollywood" lifestyle.

What's next? Jack will most likely keep a low profile for a [illegible] another season.

The Amazing Race (Premiere: September 5, 2001, CBS) Twelve two-person teams literally race around the globe on planes, trains, automobiles, rafts, rickshaws, and anything else that will help them reach their next stop. The last-place duo on each leg faces elimination, and the first team to reach the final destination shares a $1 million prize. The show is currently starting its fourth season.

The Osbournes (Premiere: March 5, 2002, MTV) This surprise smash (at least in its first season) follows the unscripted, expletive-laden travails of heavy-metal rocker Ozzy Osbourne, his wife Sharon, and two of their teenage offspring, Kelly and Jack.

Q I heard Aimee Osbourne's mad at MTV. Why is she mad at the network that made her family famous? — *Leeza, Michigan

A Despite the success of The Osbournes, the "silent" Osbourne (a.k.a. Aimee, who chose not to appear on the show) is speaking out against MTV, the network that airs the show. According to the British press, Aimee said, "The first time I saw the show, and the way they edited it to make my dad look like a clown, I wanted to cry." The eldest Osbourne sib even cautioned mom Sharon not to venture into reality-TV land, but the fam went ahead (and scored phenomenal ratings for MTV in its first season). But at a high price, claims the 20-year-old: "Now my dad is a laughing stock and known as a stuttering alcoholic. After all his years of hard work and touring, this is how he's being remembered and appreciated." When MTV got word of Aimee's across-the-pond rant, the network issued a terse "no comment."
