Sharon Osbourne's NEW DRAMA: BULIMIA!

SHARON OSBOURNE, 52, has beaten poverty, colon cancer and, most recently, a robbery in which $2 million worth of jewelry was stolen from her home. Now she's reportedly fighting yet another problem: bulimia.

According to a published report, Osbourne admitted to vomiting three times a day in a recent interview. "It's the thing that causes the most [family] arguments," she says. "We'll be at the dinner table, and I'll go off and they'll say, 'Oh, here we go again.' They hate it."

The brutally honest Osbourne, who underwent gastric bypass surgery in 1999, added: "I've tried to stop it. I thought when I got my stomach done, it would 'cure' it. It hasn't. It just means I can't eat as much. I still binge. If I'm under stress, I hit the [cookies] and [chips] and the bread. I cram it in until I physically can't get any more into my body. The food is piled in my throat. Then I have to go and be sick. I don't even have to make myself sick. It's automatic."

"I still binge," says Sharon, here in the '80s.

Osbourne, who shot to fame alongside her rocker husband Ozzy, 56, when the two teamed up for the wildly popular MTV show The Osbournes in 2002, went as far as to say that "half the women on this bloody planet" have eating disorders, "but nobody bloody talks about it."

According to the report, Sharon's children have pleaded with her to get help, but she hasn't consulted a single doctor.

"I've promised Jack I will get help, and I will in the New Year," she says. — JOHN BELL ★
